INTRODUCTION

The need for a directory of training schools caring for delinquent children was brought to the attention of the Children's Bureau by its Advisory Committee on Training Schools for Socially Maladjusted Children, which recommended that the Bureau publish such a directory.

The directory herewith presented, prepared by the Child Guidance Division of the Bureau, includes only training schools under public auspices whose primary function is care of delinquent children.

The information is presented in two sections: (1) State training schools and (2) county and municipal training schools. The section on State training schools lists 115 institutions, and includes those under the auspices of the State government in the 48 States, the schools serving the District of Columbia, and the Territorial and Insular schools in Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The section on county and municipal training schools lists 43 schools under county and municipal auspices that reported the care of delinquent children following court disposition; detention homes and other institutions that were reported as providing only temporary care pending court hearing are excluded. State departments of public welfare supplied the lists of county and municipal training schools from which were selected those schools caring for children following court disposition whose primary function was the care of delinquent children.

Information was obtained through a questionnaire addressed to each school. The original inquiry included several questions pertaining to administration, treatment program, and finances. The replies to these questions, however, revealed such a wide variation in the policy and practice of the different schools and in the interpretation of the questions that presentation of comparable data for these items would require more detailed explanation than seemed practicable for a directory. It was therefore decided to omit such items from the directory.

The name of the superintendent, the capacity of the school, and information with regard to age for admission are given as of March 1, 1940. The data on population are given as of June 30, 1939, because the fiscal year for a large number of the schools ends on June 30.

For the State schools the age for admission is given as it is specified either in the law governing the institution or in the juvenile-court law of the State. In a number of States these legal provisions have been modified by administrative policies or rulings. If such policy or ruling was reported, this is indicated in a parenthetical statement following the legal provision. The laws of a few States specified certain exceptions to the general age limitations for admission, as, for example, the provision for commitment of a child under the lower age specified if his offense would be a felony if committed by an adult. In such cases a parenthetical statement, "except in certain circumstances," is entered, but no details are given. The age for admission to the county and municipal schools is not usually specified by law as in the case of the State schools. Therefore this information given for the county and municipal schools is that reported by them without reference to whether the ages are specified by law or administrative rulings.

For the population data by color or race, the three classifications, white, Negro, and "other races" are those used by the United States Bureau of the Census. "Other races" includes Mexican, Indian, Chinese, Japanese, Filipino, Hindu, Korean, and all others.

The order followed in listing the institutions within each State is: For State schools—(1) those caring for boys only, (2) those caring for girls only, and (3) those caring for both boys and girls; for the county and municipal schools—(1) county schools and (2) municipal schools.
